ADVISORY GROUP

WORLD TRENDS IN FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND MEDIA DEVELOPMENT

Rasha A. Abdulla is Associate Professor and former Chair of Journalism and Mass Communication at the American University in Cairo. Her research interests include the uses and effects of new media, media diversity, public service broadcasting, and freedom of expression.

Yavuz Baydar is the former Independent Ombudsman for the Turkish daily newspaper Sabah and a political columnist with the daily Today's Zaman, where he writes a regular opinion column. He is also the host of the TV programme Open View on national Channel 24 in Istanbul.

Eduardo Bertoni is the Director of the Center for Studies on Freedom of Expression and Access to Information (CELE) at Palermo University's School of Law, in Buenos Aires. He served as Special Rapporteur for freedom of expression at the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, within the Organization of American States, from 2002 to 2005.

Henri Bussiek is a journalist by training, profession and conviction, and has worked since 1992 as a media consultant all over Africa, becoming involved in media reform projects in a number of countries. He is Editor-in-chief of the Public Broadcasting in Africa Series, published by the Open Society Foundations, and moderator for the African Media Barometer.

Carolyn M. Byerly is chair of the Department of Communication, Culture & Media Studies at Howard University. Her research focuses on gender, race and media. She is also co-founder of the Howard Media Group, an activist scholarly collective.

Agnès Callamard is the former Executive Director of ARTICLE 19. She is the Founding Director of Humanitarian Accountability Partnership, the first self-regulatory body for humanitarian organizations. She has published broadly in the field of human rights, women’s rights, refugee movements and accountability.

Ulla Carlsson is Director of NORDICOM (Nordic Information Centre for Media and Communication Research) at Göteborg University. She is editor of the journal NORDICOM Review and has published a wide range of books on media development, media history, popular culture, media theory, media globalization and media literacy.

Marius Dragomir is Senior Manager and Publications Editor for the Open Society Program on Independent Journalism. He has been working for 17 years as a journalist, the first eight for various Romanian media, and later for international media.
Margaret Gallagher is a researcher and writer specializing in gender, media and communication. She has worked at the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) in London, as well as for the United Nations and its agencies, the European Commission, international development agencies and broadcasting organizations.

Cherian George is a writer and academic engaged in journalism research, education and advocacy. He serves as Director of the Asia Journalism Fellowship, an initiative of the Temasek Foundation and Nanyang Technological University in Singapore. His main research interests are freedom of expression, censorship, media systems, the political economy of news media, alternative media, and religious intolerance.

Aboubakr Jamai is a Moroccan journalist and banker, and was the Publisher of the newspapers Le Journal Hebdomadaire and Assahifa al-Ousbouiya. In 2003, he was awarded the International Press Freedom Award of the Committee to Protect Journalists. In 2011 he began a web-based news service, Lakome.com. The site has a small staff and focuses on reporting political events throughout Morocco.

Ammu Joseph is an independent journalist and author based in Bangalore, writing primarily on issues relating to gender, human development and the media. She contributes to a number of mainstream publications and web-based media. She has also written, edited or contributed to a number of books and other publications.

Kwame Karikari is the Executive Director of the Media Foundation for West Africa, a press freedom/freedom of expression advocacy and promotion organization based in Accra, Ghana, working across the 15 countries of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and Mauritania.

Karin Deutsch Karlekar is the Project Director of Freedom of the Press, an annual index published by Freedom House, which tracks trends in media freedom worldwide. She coordinates the research, ratings, and editorial processes for the index, and also writes a number of the country reports.

Beata Klimkiewicz is an Assistant Professor at the Institute of Journalism and Social Communication, Jagiellonian University, Kraków, Poland. Her research interests include media pluralism and diversity; media policy in Europe; media reform in Central Europe; media system structures and regulatory models; media representations of minorities and minority media.

Remzi Lani is Executive Director of the Albanian Media Institute, Co-Editor of the Albanian edition of Foreign Policy Magazine, author of various articles on Balkan affairs for different local and foreign papers and magazines, such as: El Mundo (Madrid), The Guardian (London) and Quimera (Barcelona).

Paula Martins is a lawyer that has worked for many years with NGOs in Brazil on issues such as housing rights, indigenous land rights and disability rights. She has experience in coordinating human rights projects, researching and documenting human rights violations, and providing legal counselling on matters of public interest.
Abeer Al-Najjar is Assistant Professor at the Department of Mass Communication of the American University of Sharjah in the United Arab Emirates since 2005. She teaches both graduate and undergraduate courses in research methods, conflict & crisis communication, Arab journalism, media literacy, media production and capstone projects.

Pranesh Prakash is a Postdoctoral Associate in Law and Access to Knowledge Fellow for the Information Society Project at Yale Law School. He also serves as the Policy Director for the Centre for Internet and Society, a Bangalore-based non-profit that engages in research and policy advocacy.

Julie Reid is based at the Department of Communication Science at the University of South Africa (UNISA) and specializes in media studies, particularly the topics of media and communications policy and regulation. She is currently a Project Leader for the Media Policy and Democracy Project. She is also the Deputy President of the South African Communications Association.

Helge Rønning is Professor in the Department of Media and Communications at the University of Oslo. He has published numerous articles on literary, social, political, media and cultural issues in Scandinavian, European, African and American journals and newspapers.

David Souter is a consultant, researcher and author specializing in ICTs and their relationship with other public policy domains, particularly development, environment, rights and governance. He is Managing Director of the research and policy consultancy ICT Development Associates.

Damian Tambini is Research Director of the Media and Communications Department, Chair of the Research Committee, Director of the Media Policy Project and Convener of the MSc in Media and Communications (Governance) at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE).

Biljana Tatomir has twenty years of experience in media development. She is currently Deputy Director and Director for Program Strategy and Policy at International Media Support, a Danish-based international media support organization active in over 40 countries around the world.

Daya Thussu is Professor of International Communication and Co-Director of the India Media Centre at the University of Westminster in London, publishing many research articles about the media and their impact in democracy.

Ben Wagner is a Post-doctoral Research Fellow at the Annenberg School for Communication at the University of Pennsylvania, and holds a PhD from the European University Institute in Florence. His thesis focuses on the globalized governance of freedom of expression on the Internet, while his research interests extend to digital foreign policy, human rights, privacy and surveillance.