Over the past two decades more and more attention has been given to the issue of violence against women and children, starting with the Fourth World Conference in Beijing. In October, 2006 an in depth study was launched by the UN Secretary-General on all forms of violence against women. The study was very broad and shed light on the extent and prevalence of different forms and manifestations of violence against women. It also set the stage for initiating and continuing the necessary work at the national level in the field of violence against women.

According to UNIFEM, violence against women and girls is of pandemic proportions. Based on the data available to them, 70% of women experience physical, psychological or sexual violence from men in their lifetime, the majority by partners or people they know.

Violence against women and children is a topic of grave importance. As one of UNESCO's priority areas, research has been undertaken to understand its fundamental socio-political and socio-economic causes and to use the knowledge to promote better policies and educational programs for violence protection.

This 12-day workshop will allow participants to learn from the best practices in the areas of service provision, prevention, law and policy. The workshop content will also relate to new, culturally sensitive crisis assessments and prevention approaches.

The objectives of the workshop are to:

- Analyze social policy as it relates to prevention, treatment and rehabilitation
- Examine the theory and knowledge of various intervention models and techniques for developing and managing services, the multidisciplinary approach
- Discuss ways in which to engage men and boys in violence prevention programs
- Discuss issues related to working with the judicial system
- Exchange experiences and ideas on concepts, programs and methodologies applied in the participants' respective countries, as well as in Israel
- Analyze case studies presented by participants
