Introductory note

The present chapter contains material relating to the practice of the Security Council on voting under Article 27 of the Charter and rule 40 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Council.¹ The arrangement of the material basically follows that of the corresponding chapter in earlier volumes of the Repertoire.

Part I presents evidence relating to the distinction between procedural and non-procedural matters. Most votes in the Council do not indicate by themselves whether the Council considers the matter voted upon as procedural or non-procedural: this is the case, for instance, when a proposal is adopted by a unanimous vote; when all permanent members vote in favour of a proposal; or when a proposal fails to obtain the necessary nine votes in its favour. Part I lists those instances in which the vote did indicate, respectively, the procedural or non-procedural nature of the decision. Part II contains no entries, as during the period 1989-1992 there was no material relating to the practice of the Council in voting upon the question whether a matter was procedural within the meaning of Article 27 (2). Part III is concerned with the abstention, non-participation or absence of a Council member in relation to the requirements of Article 27 (3). Part IV deals with decisions adopted without a vote.

Article 27

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

¹ Material relating to voting in connection with the election of judges under Article 10 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice is included in chapter VI, part IV. Material on the voting procedure employed by the Council in connection with the applications for admission to membership in the United Nations is contained in chapter VII.

Part I

Procedural and non-procedural matters

Note

Part I is divided into two sections. Section A comprises instances in which the vote indicated the procedural character of the matter under consideration. Section B lists instances in which the vote indicated the non-procedural character of the matter. There was no discussion on the procedural or non-procedural nature of the questions under consideration.

The record of voting may be conclusive where a proposal obtained nine or more votes, with one or more permanent members casting a negative vote. Adoption by the Council in such circumstances indicates the procedural character of the matter; rejection by the Council in such circumstances indicates the non-procedural character of the matter.

Part II

Proceedings of the Security Council regarding voting upon the question whether the matter was procedural within the meaning of Article 27, paragraph 2, of the Charter

Note

On certain occasions the Security Council has found it necessary to decide, by vote, the question whether or not the matter under consideration was procedural within the meaning of Article 27 (2). This question has come to be termed, after the language used in the San Francisco Statement on Voting Procedure, “the preliminary question”.

There were no instances of voting on the preliminary question during the period under review.

Part III

Abstention, non-participation or absence in relation to Article 27, paragraph 3, of the Charter

Note

According to Article 27 (3) of the Charter, the affirmative vote of nine members for decisions on non-procedural (substantive) matters must include “the concurring votes of the permanent members”. Part III concerns the application of this requirement: (a) in the light of the proviso to Article 27 (3) (requiring abstention); and (b) in circumstances when a permanent member voluntarily abstains, does not participate in the vote, or is absent at the time of the vote.

A. Obligatory abstention

The proviso to Article 27 (3) states:

provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

In the period under review, there were no cases in which members abstained in accordance with the proviso to Article 27 (3). In three instances, however, the issue of obligatory abstention was considered (see cases 1-3 below).

Consideration of abstention in accordance with the proviso to Article 27, paragraph 3

Case 1

At the 2949th meeting, held on 24 October 1990 to consider the situation in the occupied Arab territories, the representative of Cuba commented on the definition of a “party to the dispute” within the meaning of Article 27 (3). Speaking before the vote on a draft resolution, which he urged be adopted unanimously, he stated that the permanent members of the Security Council had only one special prerogative under the Charter of the United Nations, and that came at the time of a vote. Even so, the Charter was careful to specify that that special authority did not prevail in all circumstances. It did not prevail on procedural issues, or when a permanent member was a party to a dispute. If a permanent member considered that a question the Council was about to take up was particularly important and close to it, its prerogative could not be interpreted as meaning that it could block the effective action required of the Council under Article 24. If a member of the Council had such an intimate connection with a particular issue, that would come closest to the definition of “a party to a dispute” and, in that case, it would have neither the special power of the veto nor, strictly speaking, the right to take part in the vote. As Article 27 (3) stated, it should abstain from voting.² In the event, the resolution in question was adopted unanimously.³

At the 3033rd meeting, held on 21 January 1992 to consider items relating to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that the legality of the Security Council’s work was subject to its observance and proper implementation of the provisions of the Charter. He maintained that that could not be achieved if the parties to the dispute in question were to participate in the voting on the draft resolution before the Council, submitted by France, the United Kingdom and the United States. He remarked: “[t]o disregard the legal nature of the dispute and to treat it as a political matter would constitute a flagrant violation of the explicit provisions of Article 27, paragraph 3, of the Charter.”⁴ In the event, all Council members did participate in the vote on the draft resolution in question, which was adopted unanimously as resolution 731 (1992). At the 3063rd meeting, on 31 March 1992, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya claimed that the procedure the Council had followed in adopting that resolution had not taken into account the correct implementation of Article 27 (3), which provided that in the case of decisions adopted under Chapter VI, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting. He contended that that was applicable to France, the United Kingdom and the United States.⁵

³ Resolution 673 (1990).

⁴ S/PV.3033, pp. 24-25.

⁵ S/PV.3063, p. 7.

By contrast, speaking after the vote at the 3033rd meeting, at which resolution 731 (1992) was adopted, the representative of the United States stated that the issue at hand was “not some difference of opinion or approach that could be mediated or negotiated”. It was, as the Security Council had just recognized, conduct threatening to all, and a direct threat to international peace and security. The mandate of the Council required that it squarely face up to its responsibilities in the case. It must not be distracted by Libyan attempts to convert what was an issue of international peace and security into one of bilateral differences.⁶ The representative of the United Kingdom observed that the Council was not, in the words of article 14 of the Montreal Convention, dealing with a dispute between two or more contracting parties concerning the interpretation or application of the Montreal Convention. It was concerned, rather, with the proper reaction of the international community to the situation arising from the failure of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, thus far, to respond effectively to the most serious accusations of State involvement in acts of terrorism.⁷

Case 3

At the 3046th meeting, on 31 January 1992, the Security Council convened for the first time at the level of Heads of State or Government to consider the item entitled “The responsibility of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security”. Addressing this issue, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Zimbabwe and Personal Emissary of the President of Zimbabwe stated that, as the principles of the Charter must govern the global order, the process of creating a new world order should begin with a re-examination of the Charter itself in the context of the changing international circumstances. A new world order could best be created by rectifying the flaws in the Charter, closing the gaps that had been revealed by recent developments, and updating those of its provisions that had been rendered obsolete. The Minister for Foreign Affairs observed, for example, that his country believed that a collective security system liable to veto by one or a few States was not reliable. It meant that the Security Council could not take any action in a conflict in which one of the permanent members had a direct interest. While that had undoubtedly been one of the considerations at San Francisco, he wondered whether it had not been overtaken by events. In that regard, Zimbabwe suggested that consideration could be given to extending Article 27 (3), of the Charter — which provided that, in decisions relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes under Chapter VI, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting. Its proposal was that this limitation should also apply to Chapter VII, so that those who wielded the veto power could not block the imposition of sanctions or any other collective enforcement action when they were parties to a conflict.⁸

⁷ Ibid., p. 104.

B. Voluntary abstention, non-participation or absence in relation to Article 27, paragraph 3

This section lists those instances in which permanent members voluntarily abstained from voting. In each case, in conformity with its consistent practice, the Security Council considered the resolution in question to have been adopted notwithstanding the abstention. During the period under review, there were no instances of non-participation of permanent members or of votes taken in their absence.

Part IV Adoption of resolutions and decisions without a vote

Note

Most procedural motions during this period were approved without a vote.⁹

Certain decisions of substance were also taken without a vote, as shown in the case of resolutions, in the table in section A below. In these particular cases, which all concerned the admission of new Members, the President, in accordance with the understanding reached in prior consultations, proposed “that the Council adopt without a vote” the draft resolution contained in the relevant report of the Committee on the Admission of New Members.

No votes were taken on decisions that took the form of statements by the President on behalf of the Council or on behalf of the members of the Council. These “presidential statements” were issued after having been agreed upon by members of the Council during consultations. In some cases, they were announced at a formal meeting of the Council (section B.1); in others, they were simply issued in written form (section B.2).

In yet other instances, Security Council decisions were recorded in letters or notes from the President of the Council (section C), with no reference to a vote having been taken.

⁹ Exceptions were the votes on the suspension of a meeting and on certain invitations to participate; see the instances cited in part I above.
