

Conclusions of the First Assembly of the International Network of Women Philosophers, sponsored by UNESCO

14-15 December 2009
UNESCO Headquarters, Paris

The First Assembly of the Network was attended by more than 80 women philosophers from 36 countries (see Annex 1: List of participants) in the following regions: Africa, the Arab region, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and North America and Latin America and the Caribbean. Mr Pierre Sané, UNESCO Assistant Director-General for Social and Human Sciences, officially opened the Assembly (see Annex 2: Address by Mr Pierre Sané).

The purpose of this first Assembly was to work out the Network's organizational arrangements and map out work for the future. A thematic debate on "What do men philosophers think about women philosophers?" was organized as part of the Assembly (contributions to that debate are to be published).

At the Assembly, UNESCO made a point of reminding participants that the International Network had been set up for all women philosophers around the world, and that the Network's members should accordingly take full ownership of this initiative. UNESCO saw its role as that of facilitator, and had no wish to direct the Network's members, nor to impose its own views in any way: it would be up to the members themselves in the future to make the Network into a universal gathering to which each participant could bring her particular contribution, in a common spirit of diversity, solidarity and the sharing of knowledge.

A number of aspects of the Network were broached during the two days of the Assembly (see Annex 3: Programme of the First Assembly). The aim of the present document is to summarize the various views expressed, suggestions made and decisions taken.

1. How to define “woman philosopher” – does this entail a different definition of “philosophy”?

- One of the basic questions underlying the Network is that of the very meaning of “woman philosopher”. Assembly participants reaffirmed the relevance of such a concept and the need to think it through, not with a view to laying down a strict, definitive and standard definition but rather to open up – and to keep open – a path for thinking internationally about the role played by women in thinking about and researching into contemporary issues. Philosophy – the critical analysis of knowledge and science – could then prove a medium through which women who wish to influence the production of knowledge and ideas could make their voices heard.
- The participants stressed the importance of including those who work in gender studies, since gender studies had originated within philosophy departments and involved the taking of philosophical positions. It was fitting, therefore, that the Network should also be open to women concerned with gender studies, women’s social and political demands, equality in the workplace, and so on.
- The Network’s rationale was based, among other things, on the need to shake off the kind of mastery philosophy and philosophers seem to confine themselves in: it is time to think of philosophy in other ways than those of conventional academia, in relation to other disciplines of knowledge and action, and with an inclusiveness that embraced the worldwide diversity of thought and practice.

Decisions

- The Network must engage in an ongoing exercise in definition whereby women philosophers themselves work out what it is to be a “woman philosopher” and what “philosophizing” means today.
- Consideration should be given to publishing the proceedings of the thematic debate on “What do men philosophers think about women philosophers?” which was held during the First Assembly. The following papers should be included in such a publication: Rationale – Fundamental Problems/Founding Problems (Barbara Cassin); A Woman and her Philosophy: the work of Nicole Loraux (Giulia Sissa); Who is woman? Who is man? About a certainty without criteria (Ali Benmakhoul); What I have learnt about philosophy from two sister philosophers (Souleymane Bachir Diagne); “Woman – “philosopher”: Where is the meaning located? (François Jullien); Sometimes a woman raises the right question (Charles Malamoud). This collection could be co-published with a publisher yet to be found.
- Men philosophers interested in this Network may wish to form a committee for reflecting in counterpoint on its work; such a committee (which might include individuals and organizations) could itself be admitted to the Network

2. Structure of the Network

One working session was devoted to the Network's structure and organization at the national and international levels.

A Steering Committee was proposed, to be composed of women philosophers belonging to the Network who would represent the various regions: Africa, the Arab region, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and North America and Latin America and the Caribbean. The Committee would, among other things, decide on the Network's formal organization (preparing and implementing the text of its rules of procedure – see para. 8 of this document), admit new members, and select the members of the Who's Who of women philosophers.

It was also agreed that in order to publicize the Network and mobilize women philosophers in all regions, National Committees should be set up for the Network in the various countries. Each country would be free to adopt the appropriate structure under local legislative provisions concerning the setting up and functioning of non-profit associations. The National Commission for UNESCO might be one of the structures which could accommodate the Network locally, without compromising its independence. The object of these national bodies would be to provide a channel of communication and a means of relaying information between the Network's members in the country and the UNESCO Secretariat, as well as with other national structures all over the world, about the various events and activities that would be set up and organized.

As for the Network's statutory Assembly, it was decided that this should be held once every two years. The representative from Azerbaijan proposed that the next Assembly should take place in a host country.

Decisions

- The Philosophy and Democracy Section of UNESCO will ensure the coordination of the International Network.
- Members interested in sitting on the Steering Committee were asked to make themselves known to the UNESCO Secretariat. So far (1 January 2010) people have come forward only from the Africa and Arab States regions.
- Meetings of the Network Assembly will be held every two years, possibly in a host country which would, among other things, see to the practical arrangements.
- The Assembly urges Network members present to set up a National Committee for the International Network of Women Philosophers in their own country, in ways that will depend on that country's administrative arrangements.
- If so requested by members interested in setting up a National Committee attached to their country's National Commission for UNESCO, the UNESCO Secretariat will invite that Commission to help set up such an attached Committee.
- Network members could also make contact with their country's Philosophy Society with a view to setting up a National Committee for the Network attached to that society. The UNESCO Secretariat could help with this, through the International Federation of Philosophical Societies (FISP).
- Participants from the Asia and the Pacific region (China, Malaysia, Republic of Korea and Thailand) are interested in cooperating as a region in the organization of the Network, and will be submitting plans for this to the UNESCO Secretariat.
- While a suitable structure is still being worked out, it is important that Network members make full use of the tools already available to them: the Network's website, the online Network directory, the draft Who's Who of women philosophers, and the Network's information bulletin.

3. The Network's website

The Network's official website is hosted as part of the website of the UNESCO Social and Human Sciences Sector at www.unesco.org/shs/philosophy/women\_philosophers.

This website will provide a platform for information exchange among the Network's members. It also houses the Network directory, and will be the home of the electronic Information Bulletin and the Who's Who of women philosophers.

Decision

- The Network's website will be managed by the UNESCO Secretariat with help from volunteer members. Philosophy students are encouraged to do an internship in the Philosophy and Democracy Section of UNESCO under the current rules.

4. The online Network directory

The online Network directory can be accessed at the Network's website and is regularly updated by the UNESCO Secretariat. The Network's members are grouped by region and by alphabetical order within regions. The directory gives each member's country, identity, area of research and a short bibliography.

The details included in this directory come from the membership form (see Annex 4: Membership Form) which each woman philosopher must herself complete on joining; the individual member is thus entirely responsible for the content.

Decisions

- The directory will be kept up to date by the UNESCO Secretariat.
- The Steering Committee will help the UNESCO Secretariat process applicants' membership forms. Steering Committee members will give their opinion on an applicant's suitability for inclusion in the online directory. This will be done by email.
- Network members will complete their membership forms carefully so as to avoid inaccurate data being reproduced in the online directory. Members will also inform the UNESCO Secretariat of any errors or inaccuracies found in the online directory.
- A computerized database management system is under consideration to make it easier to update the details and put them online.

5. The project for a Network Who's Who

A draft Who's Who was distributed to participants at the Assembly in December 2009 (see Annex 5: Who's Who Project). At this stage, it should be emphasized, this is a provisional document. The draft distributed in December 2009 will be the basis for a Who's Who of women philosophers which will be made available on the Network website as soon as it has been approved by the Steering Committee.

The idea of this Who's Who is not to make invidious distinctions, but to gather Network members around certain women philosophers who stand out because of their work, their careers or their projects, and whose adopted positions or published works provide real substance for other philosophers, thinkers and students to reflect on. Works across academic disciplines will be another criterion in selecting Who's Who entries.

Each woman philosopher's entry in the Who's Who will include various sections designed to provide clear information about her and a brief overview of her work. There will also be room on the individual entry (details sheet) for the philosopher concerned to give her thoughts in answer to the question To what extent do you think of yourself as a "woman philosopher", and why? (see Annex 6: New Who's Who details sheet). Each individual entry in the Who's Who will also include a link to one or more articles that the philosopher wishes to make available online for sharing with fellow Network members.

Decisions

- The UNESCO Secretariat will send out new individual details sheets to the women philosophers concerned for revision, updating or correction.
- The philosopher concerned should ensure that her entry takes up no more than two pages, and should return it to the UNESCO Secretariat with her definitive approval.
- Any member who wishes to make available one or more articles she considers important will be wholly responsible for the material she puts online (signed articles), and should warrant to UNESCO that she is in possession of all the necessary rights and permissions for online publication. The article(s) concerned should be sent to the UNESCO Secretariat in PDF format to be put online with a link from the member's personal entry page.
- Such articles may be written in any language the member chooses, but must always be accompanied by a summary either in English or in French.

6. The Network's electronic Information Bulletin

This bulletin will be sent out by email once or twice a year, in English and in French. It will provide a link among women philosophers in the various geographical regions, as well as between Network members and the general public.

A pilot issue (No. 0) was distributed at the Assembly in December 2009. It presented various sections (see Annex 7: information bulletin No. 0, December 2009). After discussion it was decided to keep the following sections: Editorial; Philosophical Tribune; Events; and Vis-à-Vis. The Editorial of each Bulletin will be drafted by the UNESCO Secretariat and Barbara Cassin, founding member of the Network; but the idea is that philosophers belonging to the Network should offer to act as “guest editors” with the job of choosing an editorial theme, commissioning articles for the Philosophical Tribune, and gathering notices for insertion in the Events and Vis-à-Vis sections.

The Editorial Committee will need to decide, in consultation with the UNESCO Secretariat, on the deadlines for members' contributions to the information bulletin, and will approve their content before each issue is finalized.

The following subjects were suggested at the Assembly meeting:

- What is it to be a woman philosopher? (proposed by Kathryn T. Gines, United States of America; Eva Bahovec – Slovenia; Bhuvan Chandel, India; Françoise Collin, France): Do we now need to find a standard, scientifically rigorous definition of “woman philosopher”? What qualifies as “philosophical” in the theoretical and practical work of women thinkers and activists?
- The woman philosopher: Obstacles and positive resistance to obstacles (proposed by Alexandra Ahouandjinou, Benin/France; Alice Ngah Ateba, Cameroon; Dorinda S. Bixler, Canada): How do women philosophers cope, in theory and in practice, with the obstacles in their philosophical path? How can women manage their freedom? Can philosophy be an instrument women can use to consolidate their freedom?
- Translation, philosophical dialogue and pluralism (proposed by Natalia Avtonomova, Russian Federation; Barbara Cassin, France; Azizan Baharuddin, Malaysia): What is philosophical in dialogue, and what is the relationship between philosophical dialogue and translation?
- Gender and racism (proposed by Monique David-Ménard, France; Rozena Maart, Canada): How does each of these concepts relate to political demands?
- What is excellence? (proposed by Tijania Fertat, Morocco; Marina Calloni, Italy; Nicole Dewandre, France): What are our societies' concepts of “excellence” in academic work? How is the work of women philosophers assessed? What becomes of “excellence” in the developing countries?

- “Just War” (proposed by Giulia Sissa, France/Italy; Johanna Kuçuradi, Turkey; Susana Villavicencio, Argentina; Fatma Oussedik, Algeria; Barbara Cassin, France): The notion of “just war”, a contentious term in the history of philosophy, deserves reconsideration today, in a contemporary context of an all-out war on terrorism.
- Security or human rights: a real dilemma? (proposed by Johanna Kuçuradi, Turkey; Tanella Boni, Côte d’Ivoire; Alexandra Ahouandjinou, Benin/France): On what philosophical grounds, if any, can these two notions be regarded as opposed? How should the current agenda of “100% security” in international politics be decoded? How does this dilemma relate to the notion of human dignity?
- “Caring Democracy”, Education in citizenship, Ethics and Politics (proposed by Suwanna Satha-Anand, Thailand; Majeda Omar, Jordan; Bana Bashour, Lebanon; Fernanda Navarro, Mexico; Soumaya Mestiri, Tunisia): What are the issues at stake in the current context of democratization and globalization, and what are the implications of these two concepts? What should the role of citizenship education be in countries undergoing change?
- Virginity as a transcultural issue, secularism, and religious fact in the modern day (proposed by Giulia Sissa, France/Italy; Nicole Dewandre, France; Rose-Marie Chevalier, France): What does the debate on virginity reveal about the way in which different societies think of women, relationships between men and women, social and political relationships, etc.?
- Women and crises (proposed by UNESCO): What are the perceptions and experiences of women under the impact of today’s “economic crises”, “environmental crises” and “crises of values”? What is the reality of these crises? What are the theoretical and practical situations of women around the world?
- “A new humanism”? (proposed by UNESCO): Is the historically loaded idea of “humanism” taking on a new meaning today, and if so, which one?

Decisions

- The UNESCO Secretariat will act as receiving centre for information and contributions, and will see to the checking and page layout of the electronic information bulletin.
- An Editorial Committee is currently being set up; this will be composed of volunteer women philosophers and the UNESCO Secretariat. The following have volunteered so far: Alexandra Ahouandjinou (Benin/France), Blanche Radford-Curry (United States of America), Giulia Sissa (France/Italy), Sangaré Coumba Touré (Mali) and Rozena Maart (Canada). Anyone interested in sitting on the Editorial Committee is asked to let the UNESCO Secretariat know.
- The Editorial Committee will choose the themes for the various bulletins, apart from those with guest editors. It will also have the task of reading and confirming bulletin contributions before they are put online.
- Network members, and in particular those who proposed the above subjects, are invited to submit their projects for articles (exact subject-matter, reference bibliography, likely contributors, etc.) to the UNESCO Secretariat as soon as possible. Contributions from any member are also welcome. All confirmed proposals will then be discussed and decided on by the Editorial Committee so as to appear in the next information bulletin (No. 1, September 2010) or subsequent ones.
- Another bulletin section was suggested, on “Women philosophers’ careers”: this would be devoted to portraits of individual woman philosophers, bringing out their achievements and the obstacles they had encountered. The Editorial Committee will decide whether to include such a section.
- All Network members are asked to send the Secretariat, as soon as possible, any notices they wish to appear in the Events or Vis-à-Vis sections of bulletin No.1.

7. Cooperation with other institutions

Assembly participants stressed the importance for the International Network of Women Philosophers of working with various existing institutions and associations in the field of gender studies. Possible partners here are bodies such as the Association of Women Philosophers of Argentina (which produces the review Mora) and the Centre for Women’s and Gender Studies in Brussels. Furthermore cooperation among women philosophers at the regional level should be encouraged in each region.

Decisions

- Network members should put suggestions for cooperation to the UNESCO Secretariat, which will then make contact with the institutions concerned in order to explore the various possibilities more thoroughly.
- Network members were asked to transmit to the UNESCO Secretariat a list of existing Associations, networks or other institutions in their regions which might in future cooperate with the International Network of Women Philosophers. The list might include philosophy associations, women's associations, or associations of women philosophers, as well as academic research institutes, foundations, etc.

8. Members' proposals for future projects

- Some members thought it essential for the Network to have rules that laid down its aims and operating arrangements, as well as conditions for membership. The rules would also specify the role and responsibilities of the Steering Committee and its individual members, and the role of the UNESCO Secretariat. A draft text was submitted by Majeda Omar (Jordan).
- Barbara Cassin proposed that the Network set up an accreditation system whereby certain women philosophers belonging to the Network could act as observers on its behalf at various national and international bodies where matters arose which have underlying philosophical issues (courts and tribunals, United Nations bodies, international forums, etc.): this would be most worthwhile if it could cover the broadest possible scope, including for instance matters of economics, politics, climate or law. These women observers would be charged with analysing the issues and matters of contention, and reporting on these to the International Network of Women Philosophers for discussion and debate.
- Another project the Network would like to launch was a Translation Observatory. This would have the task of listing the various countries' most important philosophical works or other intellectual publications not yet translated into other languages. This could lead to moves for the works to be translated and published in a bilingual version, with the emphasis on studying the act of translation itself, the shifting of concepts from one linguistic world to another. Such translation, done with critical awareness, could also contribute firstly to a better understanding of the structure of the language and thought of the various cultural contexts concerned and, secondly, to introducing hitherto unknown work to an international readership. The UNESCO Index Translationum can be considered as an initial tool for this project. See: http://portal.unesco.org/culture/en/ev.php-URL\_ID=7810&URL\_DO=DO\_TOPIC&URL\_SECTION=201.html.

Decisions

- The UNESCO Secretariat will help to draft rules of procedure for the Network based on the members' proposals and in consultation with the members of the Network's Steering Committee.
- The UNESCO Secretariat will look into the feasibility of accrediting Network observers at various international bodies.
- The project for a Translation Observatory will need to be studied by Network members themselves, and proposals submitted to its Steering Committee and the UNESCO Secretariat.

To sum up – and move forward ...

Setting up the Steering Committee

Members interested in sitting on the Steering Committee are asked to let the UNESCO Secretariat know. So far (1 January 2010) people have come forward only from the Africa and the Arab States regions.

Setting up the Editorial Committee

An Editorial Committee is now being set up; this will be composed of volunteer women philosophers and the UNESCO Secretariat. Those interested in sitting on the Editorial Committee are asked to let the UNESCO Secretariat know.

Building the network structure

Assembly participants and Network members are urged to set up a National Committee for the International Network of Women Philosophers in their own country, in ways that will depend on that country's administrative arrangements.

Participants from the Asia and the Pacific region (China, Malaysia, Republic of Korea and Thailand) are interested in cooperating as a region in the organization of the Network, and will be submitting plans for this to the UNESCO Secretariat.

An internship with UNESCO

Philosophy students are encouraged to do an internship in the Philosophy and Democracy Section of UNESCO under the current rules. This could, for instance, consist of helping the UNESCO Secretariat run the Network's website.

Participate in the drafting of the Information Bulletin

Network members, and in particular those who have proposed particular subjects, are invited to submit their projects for articles (exact subject matter, reference bibliography, likely contributors, etc.) to the UNESCO Secretariat as soon as possible. Contributions from any member are also welcome. All confirmed proposals will then be discussed and decided on by the Editorial Committee so as to appear in the next information bulletin (No. 1, September 2010) or in subsequent ones.

All Network members are asked to send the Secretariat, as soon as possible, any notices they wish to appear in the Events or Face to Face sections of bulletin No. 1.

Preparing the Who's Who

Philosophers covered by the Who's Who project should fill in and update their individual details sheets, making sure they take up no more than two pages, and return them to the UNESCO Secretariat with their definitive approval.

Any member who wishes to make available one or more articles she considers important will be wholly responsible for the material she puts online (signed articles), and should warrant to UNESCO that she is in possession of all the necessary rights and permissions for online publication. The article(s) concerned should be sent to the UNESCO Secretariat in PDF format, to be put online with a link from the member's personal entry page.

Presenting a Translation Observatory project

The members of the Network themselves will study the Translation Observatory project with a view to making proposals to the Network's Steering Committee and the UNESCO Secretariat.

Establishing links with other networks

Network members are asked to let the UNESCO Secretariat have a list of existing associations, networks or other institutions in their regions which might in future cooperate with the International Network of Women Philosophers. The list might include philosophy associations, women's associations, or associations of women philosophers, as well as academic research institutes, foundations, etc.

UNESCO will then make contact with those institutions in order to explore the various opportunities for cooperation.

INTERNATIONAL NETWORK OF WOMEN PHILOSOPHERS, SPONSORED BY UNESCO

FIRST ASSEMBLY

14-15 December 2009, UNESCO,
Paris

Opening address by
Mr Pierre Sané
UNESCO Assistant Director-General
for Social and Human Sciences

Your Excellencies,
Members of the International Network of Women Philosophers,
Ladies and gentlemen,

Let me first of all welcome you warmly on behalf of UNESCO, and tell you how proud we are of this solidarity among women philosophers of which all of you, by your commitment to philosophy, are the embodiment. I should also like to start by saluting the phenomenal drive shown by women philosophers in getting together at this first meeting of their Network, which they have created and so enthusiastically joined, whose future they will be making, and to whose decisions they will be giving practical effect.

As you know, our Organization – UNESCO – is the very home of intellectual solidarity, peace, and dialogue among cultures. It is a house of knowledge, built so that people can come together and exchange ideas; and it is accordingly the obvious home for your Network. The idea that UNESCO should set up this network was forged from a powerful determination to champion cooperation and collective action on every possible occasion, and never to favour exclusivity or exclusion; the determination to ensure that women philosophers have a place that is wholly theirs, where their substantial contribution to current debate will get full recognition; our determination to tell the world loud and clear how essential and imperative it is to listen to the women philosophers who are engaged in the weaving of knowledge-based, wisdom-based societies for us today.

The Network's guiding light is solidarity; but behind that is the all-pervasive and fundamental idea of equality: equality in its most universal sense, for we must not forget that though equality is a settled matter in some regions, it remains, unfortunately, an issue still unresolved in many others. Furthermore, it is our collective duty to challenge and exorcize the muttered prejudice and obfuscation that seek to preserve a male monopoly of certain jobs, positions, training and education, and sometimes even of certain acknowledgement. That is why it makes sense for you to get together in a network: your solidarity gives life and strength to the idea of equality, and stiffens our resolve to establish women's essential role in our modern societies, and that of philosophy likewise.

The idea of such a Network raises questions about a number of complex variables and concepts well worth sharing, examining and challenging; and it comes as no surprise to find the highly perspicacious article entitled "Fundamental problems/Founding problems" appearing on the Network's website. That article shows the importance of leaving the field of thought open, just as it is the essence of philosophical questions themselves never to be closed but always constantly renewed, ready to reflect any new query that can be put in accurate and appropriate terms.

Some may wonder what the particular importance of being a woman may be in terms of philosophical debate. Others may resent the raising of such a question about women only: why no consideration of "the particular importance of being a man, in terms of philosophical debate"? Yet this is the question that brings out the Network's real point: as they themselves say, women philosophers upset genres as well as gender boundaries; they challenge disciplinary distinctions, the way demarcation lines are drawn, including academic demarcation lines – which, incidentally, often differ from one country to the next; in so doing, they reveal a new stratum of philosophical debate with a change of focus; they shift the gaze of our collective unconscious away from objectives that seem so "natural" they are almost taken for granted.

It should also be emphasized that a female philosopher, no less than a male one, is bound to carry within herself some project of society, some representation of the world that is informed throughout by the rigour of the critical mind, sharp logic and short shrift for any prejudice. Through her work, accordingly, she makes her contribution to philosophical thought, giving such thought all the greater relevance to and impact upon political and sociological debate.

The names of women philosophers along the philosophical road have often been hidden from memory by the dust of history: except among philosophers, few will be familiar with Hypatia the Platonist, or Hipparchia, or Diotima, and it has only been in the last 100 years that the work of women philosophers has found its rightful place once more. Maurice Merleau-Ponty used to call philosophy "the algebra of history"; and as such the contribution of women philosophers has proved a master-class in understanding how History is shaped: the authoritative works of Hannah Arendt on totalitarianism, for instance, or Simone de Beauvoir's writings on the condition of women, have been among the most fertile sources for the struggle for women's rights. The setting up of a network of women philosophers can only enhance this shaping of our collective story with the thoughts of such philosophers; and the task in hand today includes raising the profile of their works, which are in many cases, it must be admitted, too little known.

This first Assembly, then, provides an opportunity for demonstrating one of our priorities, "gender equality", not through mere rhetoric but by actively showcasing the significant innovative contribution of the research carried on and the thinking advanced by women philosophers – research and thinking that very often have difficulty getting published, aired or discussed. Hence the importance of giving them a platform that brings together all kinds of knowledge, for the purpose of genuine and lively give and take.

The other group I should like to mention here is that of young women postgraduates studying philosophy: this Network has been set up for them, too, with the intention that they also will find it a true expression of solidarity.

UNESCO regards the Network of Women Philosophers as, first and foremost, a network of philosophers, that is to say a place to foster knowledge and the strength that comes of knowledge: countless innovative ideas, an intellectual power-house. Your contribution to contemporary issues of debate, your academic work, your publications, your lectures, symposiums and conferences, your individual and collective thoughts: all these are valued well-springs of UNESCO's practical activity.

The mandate of our Organization is both moral and intellectual; it demands enlightened decision-making and mature, mindful reflection. Whether we are dealing with such vital areas as education or science policy, with sensitive issues of bioethics, or with collective challenges such as the struggle to eradicate poverty or the untiring, uncompromising promotion of human rights, the philosopher's pen must always be one of our key sources of inspiration, and the philosopher's voice one of our best-heeded advisers.

This December has seen a proliferation of international questions that have philosophical underpinnings. I suspect you will all have studied President Obama's speech on receiving the Nobel Peace Prize in Oslo on 10 December, and his advocacy for the "just war". His situation, as a wartime President who had just sent 30,000 soldiers to Afghanistan, was indeed one which made it somewhat hard to justify the awarding of a Nobel Peace Prize. His argument for the "just war" – justified by national self-defence, as a last recourse when everything else has been tried, respecting the principle of proportionality, protecting civilians – is one that goes back to Aristotle, Saint Augustine, Grotius and all the other philosophers who have tried to develop an apparatus of argument concerning the justification of wars. Another philosopher, whose name is De la Campagne, has retorted that since war is the continuation of politics by other means, and since politics is amoral, there is no such thing as a "just" war. Now this is a philosophical debate, and in my view one that is certainly of interest primarily to women, since we know that in today's wars it is civilians – however many precautions are taken – who are the soonest affected and that among these civilians it is women and children who suffer first. Reflections on the "just war" which President Obama has recently re-ignited (on 10 January 2010) will then certainly be one theme of debate among us in the years to come.

The same applies to the Copenhagen talks on climate change, and associated responsibilities. You have heard the arguments, including those from countries in the South who say "The polluter should pay", and those in the North who say they cannot be held responsible for their grandparents' actions. This is a debate about intergenerational justice, and above all a debate about responsibility that goes beyond recriminations or reparations. Those who enjoy wealth and power have a responsibility and an obligation to help those who are not in a position to cope with the consequences of climate change. Here again we have a philosophical discussion, and it is likely that women philosophers will feel concerned since we know that climate change is going to affect the most vulnerable, and that these include – yet again – the women and the children who will be the first to suffer. So it is clear that philosophical considerations are at the heart of the great issues of the twenty-first century, including war, poverty and inequality in various forms.

I am truly delighted to see that the women philosophers who are here today to up this Network number almost 1,300.

I should like to end by telling you a story I was told by Kofi Annan. During one of the summits of African heads of State in Addis Ababa, Kofi Annan raised with them his concern over the absence of women in the delegations accompanying them. Some of these heads of State replied “Yes, but you know, it’s not easy to find women who are competent to do the work we do, at the level of continental diplomacy.” Kofi Annan retorted “But why should men have a monopoly on incompetence?”.

It is going to be really important for us that your work here is given a high profile: for if the fruit of your labours are not brought to the notice of the National Commissions for UNESCO, Member States, UNESCO’s networks and so on, it will be much harder to promote this Network; and promoting this Network really amounts to promoting your work, the results of your thinking, and above all the way in which young women undergraduate and graduate students will be attracted to the professional work you do.

Once more, please accept my congratulations on this initiative; they go especially to Barbara Cassin for taking this innovative step forward, together with Moufida Goucha. In the UNESCO Secretariat, let me assure you, you will find a partner thoroughly convinced that it is the dialogues which you will engage that are the key to our success in dispelling the shadows that threaten to envelop humanity.

I thank you for your attention.

Who's Who des femmes philosophes

A l'occasion des Premières Assises du Réseau international de femmes philosophes parrainé par l'UNESCO, ayant lieu les 14 et 15 décembre 2009, l'idée d'élaborer un Who's Who de femmes philosophes membres du Réseau est à l'ordre du jour.

Ce Who's Who ne veut pas sélectionner, mais rassembler les femmes philosophes à travers le monde.

Le premier objectif de ce Who's who est de constituer une base de données de femmes philosophes afin de contribuer à une meilleure visibilité de leurs travaux et de leur engagement en faveur de la philosophie.

Le second objectif de ce Who's Who est de consacrer une place privilégiée à toutes celles, doctorantes ou non, qui étudient dans le domaine de la philosophie afin de leur offrir un espace où elles peuvent elles-mêmes s'organiser en réseau et renforcer leurs liens.

Le Who's Who entend garantir des qualités d'excellence, de diversité et de pluralité dans les différentes disciplines intégrant la philosophie.

Le site du Réseau précise que « Toute femme travaillant dans le monde de la philosophie, ou liée à la philosophie même à partir d'une autre discipline, peut adhérer au Réseau international de Femmes Philosophes : enseignantes, chercheuses, professeures, expertes, journalistes, écrivaines, artistes, etc. ».

Définition à méditer ...

En vue du débat sur les critères à définir pour l'élaboration d'un tel Who's Who, une série de questions méritent une attention particulière :

- Quelles sont les différentes disciplines intégrant la philosophie ?
Depuis la création de ce Réseau, il n'est pas rare de recevoir des demandes d'adhésion de femmes au profil très surprenant au premier abord : des infirmières, des hydrologues, des consultantes en communication, ou autre encore. Comment devons-nous traiter de tels profils ? Ne serait-ce pas là précisément l'occasion d'examiner l'interaction entre la pensée philosophique et l'action telle que concrétisée à travers un métier particulier ?
- Comment refléter la diversité des pratiques et des statuts des femmes philosophes en évitant de privilégier un modèle unique ?
- Quels sont les paramètres de qualité et/ou d'excellence qui doivent servir à moduler les choix : enseignement, recherches académiques, publications, invitations aux conférences, etc. ?
L'entrée bibliographique, si elle reste importante, ne saurait suffire. Si la philosophie est un exercice de la pensée critique, comment l'existence de cette pensée se traduit-elle pratiquement ?
- Quel type d'originalité et de créativité faut-il prendre en considération, voire désirer, dans le choix des membres du Who's Who ?

Un Comité international du Who's Who du Réseau de femmes philosophes, composé de femmes de différentes régions aura pour tâche d'examiner les candidatures qui figureront dans le Who's Who, dès lors qu'il s'agira d'une demande personnelle, volontaire et motivée.

Les modalités et le cadre de travail de ce Comité feront l'objet de la Session IV des Assises 2009 du Réseau international de femmes philosophes.

Explanatory note

Who's Who of women philosophers

On the occasion of the First Assembly of the International Network of Women Philosophers sponsored by UNESCO, on the 14 and 15 of December 2009, the idea of elaborating a Who's Who of women philosophers, members of the Network is on the table.

This Who's Who does not aim at selecting, but rather at gathering women philosophers across the world.

The first objective of this Who's Who is to constitute a database of women philosophers in order to contribute to a better visibility of their work and of their commitment in favour of philosophy.

The second objective of this Who's Who is to establish a privileged place for all those who study in the field of philosophy, at a doctoral level or other level, in order to provide them with a space where they can establish network and strengthen their bonds.

The Who's Who intends to guarantee the values of excellence, of diversity and of plurality within the various disciplines that involve philosophy.

The Network website states that “Each and every woman working in the field of philosophy, or having ties to the world of philosophy, even if this is through another discipline, can join the International Network of Women Philosophers”.

Definition that must be thought through...

In the view of the debate about the criteria that must be established for the elaboration of such a Who's Who, some questions deserve particular attention:

- What does exactly mean the notion of "woman philosopher"?
- What are the various disciplines that involve philosophy?
Since the establishment of the Network, several membership applications have been received from women whose backgrounds may seem very surprising at first: nurses, hydrologists, communication consultants, and many others. How these profiles shall be addressed? This situation may well be an opportunity to examine the interaction between philosophical thinking and action materialized in a specific profession?
- How to reflect the diversity of practices and status of women philosophers, avoiding any kind of privilege in favour of a unique model?
- Which parameters of quality and/or of excellence are to be used to adjust the choice: teaching, academic research, publications, invitations to conferences, etc.?
The bibliography entry, although important, is not sufficient. If philosophy is an exercise of critical thinking, how is this particular way of thinking translated into practice?
- What type of originality and of creativity is to be considered, or even requested, in the choice of the Who's Who members?

An international Who's Who Committee of the Network of Women Philosophers, composed of women from different regions will be in charge of examining the applications to the Who's Who, provided these applications are personal, voluntary and justified.

The modalities and the working framework of this Committee will be the object of Session IV of the 2009 Assembly of the International Network of Women Philosophers.

- An ethical inquiry into cross media ownership and democracy in Kenya. Institutional affiliation: University of Nairobi. A PhD thesis looking at the political economy of the media from a media ethics perspective. This work investigates the impact of cross media ownership on the prosperity of democracy in Kenya. Its main hypothesis is that a cross media ownership structure hinders the media from fulfilling its normative role of being socially responsible as the societal public informer and agenda setter. This because it limits diversity and plurality in media content and media owners.

- Les auteurs d'intérêt sont principalement les philosophes de la tradition allemande entre la fin du XIXème et le commencement du XXème siècle (en particulier G. W. F. Hegel) et les écrivains français de la même période

PROJETS EN COURS OU A VENIR

- Figures du temps, Università degli Studi di Napoli – L'Orientale. Le projet concerne les articulations de la perception du temps aux niveaux aussi bien individuel que social dans la période entre le XIXème et le XXème siècle. La soi-disant crise de la subjectivité, caractéristique de cette période, a produit toute une série de conséquences, soit du point de vue anthropologique que du point de vue politique, qui rejaillissent sur les modèles et les paradigmes des sciences humaines et aussi sur les formes de la perception du temps dans la dimension mondaine et intersubjective de l'existence. D'ici, on peut arriver à penser une position pour l'homme entre ouverture et horizon dans le monde. La relation intersubjective va se constituer comme scansion d'un temps d'images partagées et en même temps retenues par le sens commun.

La considération multiculturelle de la composition des peuples est une donnée essentielle de cette réflexion axée sur les conditions nécessaires à la pacification des sociétés. Cette démarche s'inscrit déjà dans la réflexion qu'elle mène dans son groupe de recherche à l'EPHE et se trouve déjà accompagnée d'une série d'entretiens réalisés avec Stephen J Rapp, Procureur du TPI pour le Rwanda et la Sierra Leone. L'horizon de ce travail est normatif.

Autres adhérents au Réseau

Sont regroupées par ordre alphabétique dans cette partie, les fiches des personnes au profil divers, dont le domaine d'activité ne relève pas directement de la philosophie, mais qui ont demandé leur adhésion au Réseau international de femmes philosophes. Ces profils, en eux-mêmes, lancent une question essentielle à la philosophie en général, et au projet du Who's Who des femmes philosophes en particulier, à savoir : Comment la philosophie doit-elle, en théorique et en pratique, se penser en relation avec d'autres disciplines ? Cette partie entend donc donner de la matière à discussion et à interrogation.

Other applicants to the Network

This part includes by alphabetical order, the profiles of persons whose field of activity is not directly linked to philosophy, but who have applied for membership to the International Network of Women Philosophers. These profiles, by themselves, inquire upon philosophy in general and the Who's Who project in particular with a crucial question – How philosophy has to be thought through, theoretically and practically, in relation with other disciplines? Therefore, this part intends to give food for thought and for discussion.

INTERNATIONAL NETWORK OF WOMEN PHILOSOPHERS
SPONSORED BY UNESCO - INFORMATION BULLETIN*Taking on the challenge of diversity and otherness

Networking or creating links and connections is all about gathering members around a common goal. Hence, the International Network of Women Philosophers sponsored by UNESCO, launched in March 2007, is based on the stimulation of a common strength of creativity and on the sharing of a common sense of community, although pervaded by diversity. Thus, three key notions are at stake: the sense of community, the sharing and the stimulation that are today more than necessary in the act of thinking.

As today it is commonly accepted that “plurality is a necessary breeding-ground for freedoms”,<sup>1</sup> the Network will strive to take on the challenge of diversity and otherness by offering – notably through the biannual electronic bulletin – a space for expression and exchange of ideas, of practices, maybe of claims, or sometimes of astonishment. This space is open to the members of the Network, “lovers of wisdom”, as well as to all the friends and supporters of philosophy.

This Information Bulletin aims to be a flagship component of the Network, a philosophical space of freedom, enriched by the women philosophers who are its substantial allies.

Thereby, UNESCO hopes to make a contribution to the various attempts made by each of us to answer the question “How do my unlike fellow think?”

First Assembly of the International Network of Women Philosophers sponsored by UNESCO

The First Assembly of the Network will take place on 14 and 15 December 2009, at UNESCO Headquarters, Paris. The objective of this Assembly is to allow women philosophers – Network members – to further inquire on the sense of the Network and identify possible actions to be carried out. This event includes two sessions.

On 14 December 2009, the Assembly will address any question related to the functioning of the Network, as well as its orientations and upcoming activities.

On 15 December 2009, will take place an international symposium on the theme “What do men philosophers think about women philosophers?”. This symposium will attempt to rethink philosophy from a gender perspective, taking into account cultural and regional specificities. The question is overtly impertinent and ironic, opening space for re-examination and self-interrogation.

A report of the First Assembly will be published in the Events column of the launching issue of the Bulletin.

Launching of the Information Bulletin of the International Network of Women Philosophers

Presentation

Through its Information Bulletin, open to all members' contribution, the International Network of Women Philosophers will offer an innovative space for exchange of information and ideas.

This Bulletin belongs to the members of the Network and it will reflect their diversity through the articles and the announcements that they will post.

The Bulletin, as open and as diverse as possible, will also be dedicated to the exploration of the diverse ways of philosophizing in different places, cultures and professions, far beyond any established disciplinary boundaries, with the view to reflecting all the power of thought.

Hence, under the heading Philosophical Tribune, the members of the Network will be able to post thematic articles. The purpose of this column, dedicated to articles authored by women philosophers, is to share philosophical thoughts and positions, as well as their impact.

Furthermore, the heading Voices of otherness will gather texts of women and men, philosophers and non-philosophers, who wish to share their thoughts on the meaning and the implications of the Network without becoming members.

Under Events will be announced philosophical activities and events that are taking place around the world, where women philosophers' participation makes or can make a difference.

Finally, Vis-à-vis will offer a communication space where members of the Network can post announcements related to requests/offers of scholarship or fellowship, as well as announcements and critics of new publications, academic programmes, conferences and seminars, etc.

Questions under discussion

- Relevance of the proposed headings, other possibilities;
- How to select the texts to be published, without excluding or censoring and while maintaining the “quality” of the Bulletin?

See under each heading...

Philosophical Tribune

This space of writing and of expression is open to all members of the International Network of Women Philosophers who wish to share their opinions and philosophical reflections on specific themes. This heading is dedicated to diversity under its manifold characteristics, be it the diversity of cultures, of intellectual references, of disciplines or of interdisciplinary approaches, etc. The objective is to generate food for thought by sharing conceptions that are consolidated by philosophical argumentation.

The following questions regarding the organization of this Tribune are to be discussed during this Assembly:

- 1. Is it pertinent to appoint an invited chief editor for this column?*
- 2. Is it pertinent to determine a different theme for each issue?*
- 3. Is it relevant to focus on a specific geographical region or country for each issue?*

As an introduction to Issue no. 0 of the Bulletin, this column shall reproduce the text “Fundamental Problems/Founding Problems” which highlights the major questions and the unavoidable complexity that underlie the International Network of Women Philosophers.

“What exactly is meant by ‘woman philosopher’? Is it different, and if so in what respect, from a philosopher woman? Is it different from a man philosopher? Is there a distinction between a male philosopher and a female philosopher from the point of view of philosophy? If so, what is it? If not, from what point of view is this distinction relevant? These questions, which are as weighty as they are banal, cannot be avoided.

These fundamental problems are also founding problems.

The purpose is to determine the object of our study, which proves to be its subject as well – the active participant in this network, knowingly the woman philosopher. Is it sex or gender that is being accorded prominence here, stressed, lent greater visibility? What is indeed insisted upon? Is it the sexual differentiation, the sexually characterized aspects of beings? Or is it the impact of sexual differentiation upon the pursuit of knowledge and the individual or generic experience of this pursuit? Is a woman philosopher one who calls herself so, or one who is called so by others — and who are the others? Can a man be a woman philosopher? Can he philosophise like a woman, this side of or beyond the being, the quality and the determination — sex, gender, sexuality mixed together? Is philosophy a way of liberation for women who, despite the major headway made, would still need this support for affirmation and conquest?

We have chosen a provisional response: Even if a man can be a philosopher “like” a woman, it is women that this network has chosen to bring together.

A network of this kind only makes sense if international, taking into account historical and geographical characteristics. It welcomes women whose circumstances are different, in terms of politics, economics, culture, perhaps language, nationality, place in the world, and the country in which they live and work.

One of the primary points of agreement among us concerns the radically transdisciplinary character of the network: women philosophers overturn generalisations; they call into question again the distinctions drawn between disciplines, the ways disciplines and universities have been differently carved out from country to country, and stereotypes such as “philosophy for men, literature for women”. To reflect upon the interpenetrations and to bridge the diverse expressions of thought between them are the very core purpose of the Network. We are not precluding universal reporting and conversation.

There is also the problem of voice and of its echo. Whenever the notion of network is evoked, this implies thinking about members and non-members, which can possibly trigger feelings of being left out or discriminated against, which would be the opposite of the Network’s intended goal. The often blaring absence of the women philosophers’ voices on a good number of subjects — because not listened to or marginalised — induced us to create an international support system. But what kind of resonance do we wish to have? How far will the network have to go to realise the solidarity it is hoping for?

We neither wish to silence any question, nor put an end to any debate. As the network is enriched with new members, it will give rise to new questions. Precisely this will constitute its value and its utility. We are displaying prudence, not imposed prudence, but an earnest, resolute, and active one.

Voices of otherness

The creation of an International Network of Women Philosophers was an event that did not leave anyone indifferent. It triggered curiosity, including on the meaning and the implications of expressions like “women philosophers”. Therefore this column intends to gather the different points of view on this Network, its justification, challenges and implications, expressed by those who wish to discuss this initiative, be it in terms of objections, support or new proposals.

This column belongs to all those – women and men, philosophers and non-philosophers – who are not members of the Network, but wish however to contribute, raise questions, make comments, express reluctance, or – and perhaps thereby – become Ambassadors of the Network.

Events

Philosophical activities and events taking place around the world, where women philosophers' participation makes or can make a difference.

Examples for this heading

First Assembly of the International Network of Women Philosophers sponsored by UNESCO, 14 and 15 December 2009, UNESCO, Paris

This first-ever gathering of more than eighty women philosophers, members of the Network, includes two sessions.

The first session focuses on the discussion about the raison d'être of the Network, its future orientations and its mobilizing driving force.

The second session is a symposium around the question What do men philosophers think about women philosophers?.

Exhibition Elles@centrepompidou, from 27 May 2009 to 24 May 2010, Centre Pompidou, Paris

“The main criterion for choice of the exhibited works of art [...] is intended to remain in the background. The Museum exhibits exclusively women, and yet the objective is neither to demonstrate the existence of a feminine art, nor to produce a feminist object. The objective is to lead the audience to consider this exhibition as a lovely history of art of the 20th century”.

Camille Morineau, Curator of the Exhibition, in Elles@centrepompidou, Exhibition Catalogue, 2009, Paris, p. 16.

The analogy between this exhibition Elles@centrepompidou and the International Network of Women Philosophers is amazing, and yet everything in this analogy is still to be discussed, in order to reach a finer comparison.
