Introduction

Unesco, a United Nations Specialized Agency has three organs: General Conference, Executive Board and Secretariat. The General Conference is the highest authority of the Organization and it consists of representatives of the Governments of the Member States. Each Member State appoints no more than five Delegates for each session of the Conference.

The General Conference as the sovereign organ of Unesco

- . determines the policies and main lines of work of the Organization
- . approves the draft programme submitted by the Executive Board and votes funds for its execution
- . summons International conferences when deemed desirable
- . adopts conventions and recommendations to be submitted to the Member States
- . advises the United Nations in educational, scientific and cultural matters
- . considers reports from the Member States on action taken on recommendations and conventions
- . elects Members of the Executive Board

- . appoints the Director-General on the recommendation of the Board

The functions and the methods of work of the General Conference have been under constant review during Unesco's existence, see documents listed on page IV.

This inventory describes the archival series of Conference documents bound into volumes and preserved in the Unesco Archives. Users are requested kindly to inform the Archives Service (ARC), Archives and Micrographics Section (IRIAM), of all errors and omissions.

Luther Evans was elected until 3 July 1959, but in order to have the mandate coincide with the dates of the General Conference, he made known in 1956 his intention to offer his resignation as from the end of the following (10th) session of the Conference (9 C/Res.53; 9 C/DR 122, 132; 9 C/VR; 10 C/64).

Vittorino Veronese resigned for health reasons. Luther Evans, René Maheu and A.M. M'Bow considered or were candidates for re-election respectively in 1958, 1974, 1987.

Secretaries general of the General Conference

The Director-General shall act in the capacity of Secretary-General at all meetings of the General Conference.

Secretaries of the General Conference

The Rules of procedure do not mention specifically the function of the Secretary, they only say that the Director-General may appoint one or more members of the staff to act in his place at all meetings.

The term 'Secretary' of the Conference (or Secretary of the plenary meetings) came into use in 1946; In 1947-1968, 1972-1974 there were two Secretaries. Most of the time the function of the Secretary has been connected to the post of Head or Director of the Conference Services. (CP, CPG, GFS, COL). In 1975, for the first time, the same person was appointed to be simultaneously the Secretary of the General Conference and the Secretary of the Executive Board.

Note

NOTE:

Sources of information are the document 25 C/3 Annex E, other C/3 documents and records of the General Conference. In some cases information is contradictory depending upon the source and the basis of calculation. Data are not available for all items and for all sessions. Measure is the number of items for 2-18 and the number of pages for 19-25.

Comments on the data:

1. Number of Member States gives the figure of Members until the end date of the Session.

5. The Constitution was amended in 1952 (6 C/Res.41.1-2) and first Associate Members were approved in 1954.

4. Unesco came into being on 4 November 1946, the date of the 20th ratification of the Constitution, before that date there are no Member States, only signatories of the Constitution. At 8 C, in 1954, also the territory of Saar was represented.

9. In the agenda, from 1950 to 1964 a difference was made between main and subsidiary items.

11. In 1945, the debate was on the aims, purposes, functions and set-up of the new Organization to be written into the Constitution. In 1946 the debate concerned the report of the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission and the first Programme and Budget to be adopted. From 1947 onwards the general discussion concerned the annual report of the Director-General on the activities of the Organization (document C/3) and was later to be called general policy debate, which included the discussion of the Programme and Budget. The debate was introduced by the Chairman of the Executive Board and the Director-General, and it was concluded by the reply of the Director-General. In 1949, a separate general discussion was organized on the subject of the duties of States in regard to education, science and culture on the purpose of ensuing a better understanding between peoples (4 C/VR).

15. The use of Arabic as a working language was authorized at 3 C in 1948, in Beirut, but, apparently was not used (3 C/VR p.462). However documents were reproduced in Arabic, but none seem to have been deposited with the Archives.

22. The 22 is the sum of 23,24 and 25. Until 1966, Reports of the Commissions were printed in the same volume with the Resolutions.

Note: The Conference was convened by the British Government in association with the French Government by a letter signed on the 3rd (in English) and on the 4th (in French) of August 1945. The letter was accompanied by the CAME Draft Proposals for the Constitution; the French Proposals were forwarded to the British Government by a letter dated 21st August 1945.

In all 44 Governments were represented in the London Conference. The invitation had been addressed to the 51 countries which were the original members of the United Nations, i.e., States which took part in the San Francisco Conference in April-June 1945, or had previously signed the Declaration by United Nations, and which later signed and ratified the UN Charter.

The Working Committee (CWC) of the Conference was appointed by the Conference of Allied Ministers of Education (CAME) to do the preparatory work before the November Conference. The Committee met four times between 26th September and 29th October 1945.

The Conference had ten ordinary plenary meetings and an extraordinary one on the morning of the 16th November for speeches "to the conscience of mankind".

INDEX

This index refers to the subject matter and personal names on the pages of this Inventory, excluding, however, the most general subject words like 'education', 'natural, social, and human sciences', 'culture', 'communication', because they appear everywhere. To trace detailed information of the General Conference documents the following documents and indexes should be used:

- . Indexes listed below and in this Inventory to the resolutions, proceedings, programme and budget
- . lists of documents
- . Unesco list of documents and publications(ULDP) 1972-, and UNESBIB and ICONFEX data bases
- . agenda of the Session
- . contents tables of Records and documents

Note on the list of indexes on the following page:

c-index = card-index available at ARC
v. 10 = index in the volume no.10 as listed in this Inventory
Reports = Reports of Commissions and Committees
Plen/YR = Verbatim records of the plenary meetings
Com/SR = Summary records of the Commission and Committee meetings
C/5 = Programme and budget
C/3 = Report of the DG on the activities of the Organization
DR = Draft resolutions presented by the Member States
ICONFEX, ICONF or I = references indexed in the ICONFEX data base

Indexing principles and practices have been subject to variations in the course of time. There are basically two types of indexes: subject and by country. The subject index includes also geographical and personal names as subjects; the country index is arranged by country (Member State) and then by broad subject; it includes also interventions of the Director-General and his representatives. The indexes not printed are accessible for consultation in the Archives reading room(ARC).

Briefly stated, the history of General Conference indexes is as follows: There is an index to resolutions for every session, it is now computerized in the ICONFEX data base. For 1-3 C there was one comprehensive index covering subjects, countries, speakers; for 4-10 C two separate indexes: one for resolutions and another for verbatim and summary records. This latter index is on cards only for 11-13 C. For 14-24 C there is again a comprehensive index covering Records: resolutions, Commission reports, YRs and draft resolutions and working documents. Since 4 XC(1982) the index is computerized.

If no index is indicated, the list of documents and the agenda should be used as well as the contents tables of documents.

This question will have to be faced. It is a more real problem for new States than for those with old-established and rooted foundations. But the question is, I suggest, answered by this great international conference. We here could not be interested in international work if we were not firmly rooted in our national loyalties. You cannot build a bridge unless there is solid earth at each end of the bridge. Our international organization, intended to be a bridge between nations, must rest firmly on foundations dug deeply into the national life and tradition of the Member States. International fellowship and national personality are not incompatible.

As I have said, our task here is to frame a constitution, and constitution-making is a task that tends to interest statesmen rather than creative artists. The creative mind wants to know what we plan to do with our machine when we have made it.

What can this Organization do? Can we replace nationalist teaching by a conception of humanity that trains children to have a sense of mankind as well as of national citizenship? That means working for international understanding.

What a difference might be made if we could establish, for instance, international commissions on the impartial teaching of history and geography and standards of civic conduct!

Why should we not undertake international research into comparative educational method and systems of child guidance and psychology?

Why should we not organize more widely the interchange of scholars and teachers, especially student teachers and teachers in training colleges?

Can we not use broadcasting and films to promote mutual understanding?

Can we not increase the interchange of books and make easy the flow of books and serious periodicals across the frontiers? This is especially important for the countries who have lost so many of their books, libraries and records.

Is there then to be no role for the national State in modern education? Of course there is. The problem we shall have to face is how to cast the state for a progressive role in education, instead of that of the jealous parent who will allow no outside interest to enter the national home.

It would be a great advantage if States would compete in the new and best methods of teaching, in erecting modern buildings, in supplying up-to-date equipment and in securing a high status for their teachers, and would compare their work one with the other.

Other ideas will be thrown up in our discussions. But we cannot chart the future of the Organization which we are met here to found. We must not get lost in dreams and visions, for to us has fallen the very practical task of drawing up the constitution of the Organization by which our hopes and desires may be fulfilled, and for which cases we cannot yet discern may later emerge.

Our Conference is of unique importance and unique hopefulness: for surely in the field which is our concern the national and the international can most readily be fused for the common good of common man. Let us then in faith and confidence set our hands to our work.

Opening Address by the President of the Conference
The Rt. Hon. Ellen Wilkinson, M.P. (Minister of Education)

We are met at the end of the greatest war in history, against the background of two continents with their attendant islands, across which the fires of war have raged. Even now the embers still glow, and here and there the flames still flicker.

All of us here—all the nations that we represent—have taken some part in this great struggle. All have ranged themselves under the flag of freedom and against aggression and oppression. Many of us have drunk together from a common cup of sorrow and sacrifice.

Now we are met together; workers in education, in scientific research and in the varied fields of culture. We represent those who teach, those who discover, those who write, those who express their inspiration in music or in art. We have a high responsibility, for entrusted to us is the task of creating some part—and not the least important part—of that structure of the United Nations on which rest our hopes for the future of mankind. It is for us to clear the channels through which may flow from nation to nation the streams of knowledge and thought, of truth and beauty which are the foundations of true civilizations.

Here are things on which, and through which, men can so readily come together. Music knows no barrier of tongues and pictures speak without speech. Knowledge should know no frontiers, and there is a brotherhood of learning no less strong perhaps than that brotherhood of which the poet spoke—'the brotherhood that binds the brave of all the earth.'

We live in a machine age and the world has worshipped at the shrine of the practical man and of technological achievement. But we know that progress as machine users can lead only to disaster unless we also have progress as human beings. Behind the machine, and vastly more important, is man and the mind of man. It is indeed the mind of man—the right-mindedness of man—which alone can prevent the misuse of the new powers always coming to his hand. Civilization, it has been said, represents the conquest of nature. But surely it must also depend on the development of all that is best in human nature.

The struggle was won. Now we have to take stock and look to the future.

First, in the physical world, we find ruined schools and universities, textbooks burned, libraries destroyed, scientific apparatus smashed or blown up.

In the realm of the mind, many teachers have been lost. Among the children, many have had no continuous school life during the war and in some countries a whole generation has largely missed its education. There is widespread malnutrition, and the years that should have passed in security and innocence have been lived amid horror, fear and suffering.

On the other hand, we have a generation of young men and women who have shared in a great adventure and have fought in a great cause. They will be returning from the Services experienced in life and filled with a determination to see to it that the world shall not be driven into facing this ordeal again for a third time, which might well be the end.

They realize that wars have got to be prevented. But prevention of war alone is not enough. We need the organization of something positive—the positive creation of peace and the ways of peace. That is our task at this Conference.

We meet to draw up a constitution for an organization, designed to take its place as one of the 'special agencies' under the Charter of the United Nations.

What do we mean by an international Organization for education?

First and foremost, we intend surely that there shall henceforward be a link, an official link, under the United Nations Charter, between teachers in every part of the world. Not, of course, between teachers alone. I am not forgetting the administrators, the inspectors, the parents—least of all, the children and young people.

But it is of the teachers that I am particularly thinking today. And, if my fellow-delegates will allow me, I would like to send my voice beyond these walls and address myself to teachers wherever they are carrying on their self-sacrificing labours. I say to them: Pay attention to what is being done here in London. Support those who are establishing this organization and, when it is established, see that you make it your own, to reflect your wishes and to meet your needs. See that its influence penetrates from the officials at its centre to the scattered workers on the circumference, so that the unity of the teaching profession may at last be no empty slogan but a living reality expressed through the effective working of the new international Organization.

Though Science was not included in the original title of the Organization, the British delegation will put forward a proposal that it be included, so that the title would run 'Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.' In these days, when we are all wondering, perhaps apprehensively, what the scientists will do to us next, it is important that they should be linked closely with the humanities and should feel that they have a responsibility to mankind for the result of their labours. I do not believe that any scientists will have survived the world catastrophe, who will still say that they are utterly uninterested in the social implications of their discoveries.

It is the scientists themselves, I am glad to say, who have insisted on the United Kingdom delegation putting forward the proposal for the inclusion of the word 'Scientific' in the title of the Organization. There are already in existence many international unions of different branches of science. We welcome their co-operation and, of course, do not wish in any way to cut across or interfere with their activities.

Lastly we have the word Culture. Some may argue that the artist, the musician, the writer, all the creative workers in the humanities and the arts, cannot be organized either nationally or internationally. The artist, it has been said, works to please himself. That might have been a tenable argument before the war. But those of us who remember the struggle in the Far East and in Europe in the days preceding the open war, know how much the fight against fascism depended on the determination of writers and artists to keep their international contacts that they might reach across the rapidly rising frontier barriers.

Some of the delegates of the thirty-five governments here represented may feel concerned lest, in seeking to bring teachers, scientists and creative artists together in this way, we undermine their loyalty to their own countries. Teachers especially have the task of preparing young minds for national citizenship. May there not be for them a conflict of loyalties?
