In December 2013, Empaako tradition of the Batooro, Banyoro, Batuku, Batagwenda and Banyabindi of Western Uganda was inscribed on UNESCO's Urgent Safeguarding List. Empaako is a traditional naming system where by, in addition to family and given names, a child is given Empaako from a list of twelve shared by entire Community. The practice is associated with rituals and ceremonies of which meaning form the niche of identity and belief systems of the concerned communities. Empaako practice is faced with attack from religious groups, diminishing use of its language and abandoning performance of its ceremonies coupled with drastic loss of knowledge of these ceremonies.

With the general objective of revitalisation of performance of ceremonies and enhancing the capacity of bearers to transmit the practice, this project aims at building the capacity of communities to document for safeguarding, increasing availability and accessibility to the associated knowledge, raising awareness and mobilizing practitioners to revive the practice.

A practical guide, to community self-documentation of ICH will be developed and the capacity of 87 stakeholders will be built to document their own ICH, creating a network of promoters of community-based documenters of ICH.

The knowledge of the ceremonies and practices will be documented by their practitioners themselves and disseminated through multimedia channels, raising awareness of communities.

This will be achieved through a drive of community self-documentation of ICH, that begins with development of a practical guide, followed by training of trainers, 2 capacity building workshops, data collection processing and ending with massive dissemination of documented knowledge. The project will also consolidate mechanisms for self encouragement and mobilization of bearers for revitalization of performance of Empaako naming ceremonies which include weekly radio programmes and monthly clans meetings.

Not fewer than 750 or more than 1000 words

This project will contribute to safeguarding Empaako Tradition of the Batooro, Banyoro, Batuku, Batagwenda and Banyabindi of Western Uganda which, in 2013, was inscribed on the UNESCO's Urgent Safeguarding List.

Empaako is a naming system whereby in addition to the family and given names, children are given one name from a fixed list of 12 collectively called Empaako and shared across communities. They include Okaali which is exclusively for a king, Araali, Acaali, Bbala, and Apuuli which are exclusively for males, and Ateenyi, Akiiki, Abwoli, Atwoki, Adyeri, Amooti and Abbooki which can be given either sex. There is no agreed translation of the practice to any language foreign to its cultural context. Some descriptive attempts in English would be pet, honour or praise names.

Empaako practice is transmitted through a naming ceremony which has several rituals that have slight variations from community to community. The meaning and interpretations of the rituals are linked to the value systems of these communities. In the naming ceremony, the paternal aunties receive the baby and examine its features. Any resemblance to the living or living dead relatives forms the basis of the choice of Empaako to give the baby.

After discussion on proposals, the clan head rules and declares the chosen Empaako by addressing it directly to the baby. A shared meal of millet and smoked beef follows, gifts are presented to the baby and tree or banana is planted in its honour.

In case of a child born outside own clan or an outsider who comes to live in a community, a ceremony which involves sharing Omwani (coffee barriers) and milk and kubukara (a reception ritual involving sitting on the lap of the head of clan to receive blessings) is organized.

In case of an outsider, the choice of Empaako is based on the symbolism in the associated meaning in relation to the qualities which the host family wishes that person to have. In an ideal cultural situation, everyone who steps in the community of Empaako gets one, because it is the only medium of relationship and interaction.

In greeting, the two address each other using Empaako and one asks Empaako only on first interaction. Addressing using someone's exact Empaako, affirms that 'I know and recognize you as person' since they are only 12 shares by entire society.

The use of Empaako helps to define and categorize a web of social relationships and interactions. Addressing using Empaako to a parent, an elder, a leader, a spirit medium or god is a declaration of respect and honour and to a lover, a tender minor, a sick, a suffering, a missed or dead dear one is an expression of love or affection. Empaako is also used in expressing thanks, bidding farewell and appealing for favour from both human and super human beings.

Empaako is faced with serious threats to its viability.

Some people from the traditional Empaako communities no longer give Empaako to their children and no longer use it in their daily lives. Majority of those who are still giving Empaako to their children and using it in daily life, have abandoned the naming rituals. They have lost the knowledge and meaning of the Empaako naming ceremonies and beliefs, practices and social values associated there with.

The knowledge of the naming ceremony is not documented as the number of elders with such knowledge reduces. In these communities any knowledge which is only transmitted orally, is currently not accessible to the young generation.

The cultural meaning and value of Empaako is rooted in the naming rituals. The Empaako received without carryout the ceremony does not carry the attendant meaning and value and is culturally dismissed as illegitimate. Members of the community ask the bearer of such "Empaako Yaawe Bakagiriira oburo?" (Was the ceremonial millet meal taken for that Empaako of yours?) while dismissing it as valueless.

Two religious cults preach against Empaako and their followers do not give Empaako to their children and abandon their own Empaako on the day of conversion. These religious groups have an estimated number of 700,000= followers in the Empaako communities. The attack on the tradition thrives on mainly gross lack of information about its meaning and social values. Documentation will avail information that can facilitate dialogue with such groups.

The language of Empaako tradition (Runyoro-Rutooro) is declining in usage even among its own traditional communities. Fashionable expressions from advancing dominant languages are replacing some roles of Empaako practice especially among the Youth.

The general objectives of the safeguarding plan at inscription in 2013 and as revised after, are revitalization of performance and observance of associated ceremonies and practices hence, enhancing the capacity of concerned communities to transmit the knowledge, skills and meaning to successive generations.

These will be achieved through measures which include strengthening the capacity of communities to document for safeguarding, increasing availability of associated knowledge, raising awareness and self-mobilization of practitioners for revitalization of performance and observance of associated ceremonies and practices.

The post-inscription extra-ordinary report approved in 2015 (ITH/15/10com/6.b page 8) brings out results of the efforts of communities and State Party after inscription, as participatory review of safeguarding plan, establishing mechanisms for effective stakeholders participation and developing a resource mobilization strategy which focuses on local resources as well as seeking additional resources from international sources, including elaborating and submitting this international assistance request to Intangible Cultural Heritage Fund. All these were implementing recommendations contained in the inscription decision (8.com7.a12,) where among others, the State Party was particularly invited, in its fundraising drive, to present a request to Intangible Cultural Heritage Fund. The initial raising awareness and mobilization of stake holders has also been realized which need to be enhanced.

These results lay the ground on which this proposed intervention seeks to build. Comprehensive documentation is a central measure around which capacity strengthening, awareness raising, increasing knowledge availability and practitioners' self-mobilization will hinge to build towards revitalization and capacity enhancements of the bearer communities for perpetual transmission of the element.

Project preparations will involve consultations, procurement and establishing a 17-member Central Project Management Committee (PMC) constituted by one representative from culture ministry, 4 local governments, implementing organization, NATCOM, 5 community institutions and additionally, 5 community project coordinators. This PMC will have a branch at community level (local government, community institution and community project coordinator); be represented on major activities and will hold 5 general M&E meetings and approve 2 general reports.

Activity 1:

Development of the Practical Guide to community-self documentation of ICH.

Implementing organization will contract a national expert, to review existing literature, traditional documentation systems of 5 communities, interview practitioners, stakeholders, compile a guide, pretest it and evolve a customized guide for community self-documentation of ICH. This will serve as training manual for TOT and capacity-building workshops which will evolve a community-based network of ICH documenters. It will then guide documentation of ceremonies and practices associated with the Empaako naming system and may be adopted in other ICH documentation in the same and other communities. It will be printed in English (500 copies) with a Runyoro-Rutooro translation (1000 copies).

Activity 2:

Training of Trainers Workshop (ToT)

Implementing organization will organize a 10 days' residential-training workshop to develop a team of trainers which will facilitate capacity building workshops that will empower practitioners to document their own ICH.

All the 17 members of the central PMC, as defined above, will be targeted. Additionally, 10 professionals at community level, from the disciplines of visual art, radio programming, videography, production, theatre, script writing, music composing, book writing, photography and anthropological researching. This training will impart documentation skills and will be facilitated by 2 experts and 5 specialists in the above disciplines identified in the country.

The methodology will include presentations, demonstrations, case studies, group discussions and field work. The guide book, the convention documents, this project profile and discipline-specific documents, will constitute the training materials.

Capacity – building workshop in Fort-Portal

Implementing organization, assisted by community project co-coordinators, will organize a 10 days capacity-building workshop in Fort-Portal to give documentation skills to 30 out of 60 practitioners targeted for capacity-building from the 5 communities.

The 60 are constituted by 12 practitioners from each community who will include 5 clan leaders (males), 2 most knowledgeable people in the ceremonies, (1 male, 1 female) and 5 youths (3 females, 2 males) for maximizing knowledge sharing, female inclusion and intergenerational communication.

7 facilitators, will be selected from the commissioned trainers from TOT, and will be supervised by 2 experts.

The workshop will develop interview guides, documentation format and schedule, scripts and produce 30 community-based documenters of ICH. The training materials and methodology used at TOT will also apply here. PMC will have 2, one per person, one day monitoring missions.

Activity 4

Capacity-building workshop in Hoima

This will be the same content as activity 3 above, but taking on the remaining 30 practitioners of the targeted 60, in a different venue for convenience of participants.

Activity 5

Documentation of ceremonies and practices associated with Empaako naming system.

The knowledge, actions and interpretations of the ceremonies and practices associated with Empaako naming system from the 5 participating communities, will be documented in form of audio-visual recordings, photography, text and art representations of 12 Empaako.

a) Data Collection

The 12 community-based documenters from each community, coordinated by community project coordinators, will identify key respondents, ceremonies spontaneously taking place, and coordinate information gathering, for 5 days, per community.

The 10 community-based professionals, will be divided into two, 5 members data collection teams, which will link-up with the 12 community-based documenters, in each community, and lead the technical roles.

In-depth interviews will be conducted on 3 key respondents, per community, purposively selected and who will be given Honoraria, since they are often elderly with severe limitations. 2 spontaneous ceremonies will be recorded per community in addition to unstructured observations, interviews and recordings.

b) Data processing

The implementing organization will contract consultants to edit, translate and produce the materials into multi-media formats including; text/book in Runyoro-Rutooro (3000 copies), with an English version, (2000 copies), Video, documentary, feature, series and magazine for appropriateness of different audiences and media. Brand and burn 1950 copies of DVDs', mixing those different formats. Two visual artists will produce visual representation of 12 Empaako (ten sets). A documentation expert will supervise in 10 work-days and PMC will have five, one person, one day-monitoring missions.

Activity 6

Dissemination of documented knowledge of ceremonies and practices associated with Empaako naming system.

Dissemination will target the youth, practitioners and the public to impart skills and knowledge and influence understanding, appreciation and safeguarding actions. The text and audio-visual productions will be stored on website, 2 institutional archives, 2 community and 22 school libraries. The visual art representations will be put in 5 national and community museums.

The launching and commissioning event will have 800 participants from practitioners, schools, libraries, media, theatre, museums, NGOs and government who will be publicly commissioned along with community professionals and documenters for ongoing dissemination.

Other strategies will include adapting materials into the monthly clans meetings, weekly radio talk-shows, interactive website, social media platforms, print media, community theatre, two local and national televisions' cultural programs, school reading materials for cultural education, adult literacy programs and professional presentations in schools and community festivals, exhibitions and workshops. And producing brochure, 3 banners and 300 T-shirts.

Activity 7:

Monthly Clans meeting to mobilize practitioners and monitor revival of performance of Empaako naming ceremonies.

This will be a community mechanism to encourage and monitor improvements in observance of ceremonies. It will also track documentation and after become a dissemination forum.

Activity 8

A weekly 2 hours-radio talk show on local radio station.

This will run weekly for the entire period of the project and beyond, as a forum for communication, education and mobilization of practitioners to revive the practice and for dissemination of documented knowledge. It will be coordinated by community project coordinators and facilitated by clan leaders.

Closure will involve PMC approval of report and submission to UNESCO

Not fewer than 300 or more than 500 words

Five out of sixty-five Ugandan indigenous communities are bearers of Empaako naming system and therefore concerned with this project. They include Batooro, Banyoro, Batuku, Batugwenda and Banyabindi. These communities are represented by 44 clans of which membership cut across. Clan leaders, represented up to family level, are the key custodians and practitioners of Empaako tradition. They cause and lead cultural rituals and ceremonies including ceremonies associated with Empaako naming system. Traditionally, all clans in a particular community collectively used to be represented by a king or a chief. But today this is not working across all communities. In some communities, the cultural voice, above the clan level, is better represented by voluntary community associations. Therefore, in these particular communities, the leaders of the clans, chiefdoms and voluntary community associations represent the communities.

The clan leaders were mobilized right from inventorying and nomination of Empaako tradition and formed a monthly forum a round safeguarding. During elaboration of this request, this forum generated the safeguarding ideas and also was used as entry point to assemblies of each individual clan. Five meetings of the forum and 12 individual clan assemblies discussed this proposal.

The leaders of the clans, cultural institutions and community Associations, coordinated the consultations in elaboration of this request and contributed the required resources for the whole exercise. Three of the five communities organized major events, aimed at adopting the final draft. These include the Banyabindi Empaako festival at Kinyamaseke, 28-29 November 2014, Batuku annual festival 26-27 December 2014 at Rwebisengo and Batooro Empaako celebrations on 17th

June 2014 at Mucwa.

This project built on the concept of community self-documentation of ICH, will be implemented by the communities as the main drivers. With the exception of representatives of government and NGO stakeholders, all participants in the project will be mobilized and nominated by leaders of the community institutions from their own membership.

During the development of the practical guide to community self-documentation of ICH, communities will provide information on their traditional systems of keeping information and will approve the draft.

During all capacity-building workshops the identified 10 community professionals (at least 4 are women) will facilitate and resourceful elders will inform the discussions, in addition to participants being community representatives.

During documentation, 12 community documenters (at least 4 are women) will do sensitization, organization and coordination, while community based professionals will execute technical tasks of data collection, guided by the expert.

Community leaders and structures will be used to disseminate the documented knowledge.

The radio programs and monthly clans' representative meetings which will mobilize bearers towards revitalizing performance of naming ceremonies, will be organized and facilitated by clan leaders.

Representatives of 5 community institutions will represent communities on the Project Management Committee that will carryout overall monitoring and evaluation of the project.

The clans' representative forum and 5 cultural / community institutions, will be some of the institutions which will plan and execute follow-up activities and which will integrate outputs and intentions of the project, into their individual institutional operations.

19. Implementing organization and strategy

Describe the background, structure, mission and relevant experience, etc. of the implementing organization or body indicated under section 8 that will be responsible for carrying out the project. Identify the human resources available for implementing it and indicate their division of tasks. Describe how it will manage the project implementation.

This project being the first documentation project to be implemented in these communities, will introduce skills of documentation as well as knowledge and information concerning the 2003 UNESCO convention. The practical guide to community-self documentation of intangible cultural heritage will influence development of documentation capacities in these communities. It will introduce documentation for safeguarding ICH as a deliberate and conscious process inherent in the communities.

Professionals in documentation related disciplines, operating at community level, will get skills of documenting intangible cultural heritage and form part of the network of community based promoters of community self-documentation of ICH. These professionals will extend the skills to influence capacity development in the institutions where they operate from. They come from sectors like media, broadcasting, language promoters, publishing, performing art, music and cultural research.

Practitioners of Empaako tradition from clans, cultural institutions and community Associations will receive documentation skills and knowledge which will be extended to influence capacity development in their respective institutions.

Safeguarding skills and competencies of representatives of participating government and NGO stakeholder institutions, will be strengthened by the project, especially in respect to documentation of ICH. Involved institutions include 3 ministries, 4 local governments and 1 NGO.

Facilitating the process of the bearers, documenting their own intangible cultural heritage, will be a new experience to the implementing organization and will be an addition to existing stock of skills and knowledge in the organization. The project will help the implementing organization to work with the existing experts in the country, as they will be solicited to re-enforce the implementing team. This will strengthen the implementing organization's capacities especially in the areas of developing national strategies and guidelines, editing and producing big and Multi-Media documentations.

The project management committee at community level, will remain permanently supervising integration of ICH concerns in the general community programmes which are implemented by local governments and cultural institutions.

The community based professionals in different ICH related fields, who will participate in the project will be inspired and oriented to projects of safeguarding intangible cultural heritage. These will mobilize resources from corporate and institutions for ICH related projects and will integrate safeguarding of ICH in their usual programming and in their respective institutions.

The project will inspire a desire and a practice, among participating communities, of documenting intangible cultural heritage as a crucial way of ensuring transmission of heritage into successive generations. This will generate effective demand to invest in documenting other elements of their heritage.

As the process already started during nomination, this project will help to revitalize and consolidate the traditional clan treasuries or common pool systems and direct them to supporting modern safeguarding of ICH as a deliberate and conscious process. This ingredient will be built in the documentation guide, capacity building, the actual documentation process and operations of project management committee and the clans' representative forum.

Like the inscription on USL of this element has already done, the documentation project is likely to inspire other communities in the country to raise resources and document their own heritage.
