12. Global geoparks: 1

- Grutas del Palacio

The first Geopark of Uruguay is located in the northern part of the Department of Flores. The crystalline basement rocks of the Rio de la Plata Craton, which underlie most of Uruguay, are only exposed in the south and east of the country where they make up a characteristic hilly landscape. Elsewhere, they are covered by younger volcanic or sedimentary rocks, which form wide and naturally fertile prairies. The rocks exposed in the Geopark are geologically very old (Precambrian) but every other geological age is represented in the Geopark by different kinds of rocks and sediments. At its northern sector, several Permian sedimentary rocks (sandstone, siltstones and rhythmites) are exposed. Younger lateritic soil features with typically reddish colour are exposed in the 'Grutas del Palacio Geosite', which presents a picturesque cave system. The singular geological formation of the caves is characterized by almost 100 columns that are up to two meters height.

13. Biosphere Reserves: 2

- Bañados del Este (1976). The Reserve includes protected areas such as monuments, natural parks, fauna and flora. This 'Eastern Wetlands' region comprises a remarkable complex of ecosystems of high biological diversity and very rich wild life. 235,687 inhabitants (1997) live in the biosphere reserve that develop pasturing, planting of rice, cattle raising and commercial collection of fur and aquatic mammals (otter and sea lion). The ecosystem is threatened with serious changes as stock raising gradually gives way to rice fields. Sites of prehistoric archeological interest also exist that would have to be incorporated for their study and preservation defining their patrimonial value. The biosphere reserve develops planning and territorial management activities, incorporating the environmental dimension in local economic and social systems, local participation and knowledge generation.
- Bioma Pampa-Quebradas del Norte (2014): The Biosphere Reserve covers an area of 110,882 ha in a biogeographic region characterized by a rolling topography reaching a maximum of 369 metres in height, a humid-subtropical climate with over 1,000 mm annual rainfall, and a predominance of subtropical grasslands. The biosphere reserve is found on the east side of the Cuchilla de Haedo among the headwaters of rivers that flow into the River Tacuarembó. This biosphere reserve comprises a mosaic of different ecosystems, including a primary forest with subtropical jungle, the quebradas, which represents the southernmost vestige of the 'Atlantic Forest' environment. The biosphere reserve is also inhabited by a small number of people (around 2,000) living in towns of 10 to 50 houses amid a rural environment. The villagers are predominantly smallholder farmers who engage in agricultural activities. The present inhabitants, who are representatives of the gaucho culture, originate from the hybridization of a triple matrix: native Guarani people, Europeans and afro-descendants. The main economic activities of the local population are extensive livestock farming, family-agriculture, including food crops and animal husbandry, and afforestation.

14. World Heritage Sites: 2 cultural sites

- Historic Quarter of the City of Colonia del Sacramento (1995): Founded by the Portuguese in 1680 on the Río de la Plata, the city was of strategic importance in resisting the Spanish. After being disputed for a century, it was finally lost by its founders. The well-preserved urban landscape illustrates the successful fusion of the Portuguese, Spanish and post-colonial styles.
- Fray Bentos Industrial Landscape (2015): Located on land projecting into the Uruguay River west of the town of Fray Bentos, the industrial complex was built following the development of a factory founded in 1859 to process meat produced on the vast prairies nearby. The site illustrates the whole process of meat sourcing, processing, packing and dispatching. It includes buildings and equipment of the Liebig Extract of Meat Company, which exported meat extract and corned-beef to the European market from 1865 and the Anglo Meat Packing Plant, which exported frozen meat from 1924. Through its physical location, industrial and residential buildings as well as social institutions, the site presents an illustration of the entire process of meat production on a global scale.
