

Principle 83 of the Islamic Republic of Iran Constitution

The ownership of the precious buildings, monuments and properties belonging to the State and being considered as national treasures, may not be transferred to any person, unless otherwise approved by National Consultative Assembly, provided they are not among unique national treasures.

Article 26 of Iran civil code

The State properties which have been intended for public interest such as fortifications, fortresses, moats, military earth works, armory, weapon, reserve, war-ships, as well as equipments and furniture, buildings and monuments belonging to government, State telegram cables, museums, public libraries, historical products and relics, and the like-totally any property, whether movable or immovable, which, under the title of public benefit and national interest, is in the state possession or have been allocated by government to any province, city, district or village, may not be owned privately.