“A city is more than a place in space. It is a drama in time.”
Patrick Geddes

The Digital Street Lab in a Box (DSLB) is a Media Information Literacy readymade. It is a prototype, a tool for the street in the age of algorithms.

The Algorithm that Ate the Street examines the effect that social media bubbles and weaponized data have on urban streets. The workshop will examine how urban designers can make better use of the street and digital creatives to protect communities from the toxic aspects of social media.

The Thrill of Tribalism

Facebook's most consequential impact may be in amplifying the universal tendency toward tribalism. Posts dividing the world into "us" and "them" rise naturally, tapping into users' desire to belong.

Its gamelike interface rewards engagement, delivering a dopamine boost when users accrue likes and responses, training users to indulge behaviors that win affirmation.

And because its algorithm unintentionally privileges negativity, the greatest rush comes by attacking outsiders: The other sports team. The other political party.

Edgar Alan Poe wrote a story about a whirlpool. He called it “A Descent into the Maelstrom.” It was about a sailor in a small boat that was sucked into a gigantic whirlpool. With all hope lost the sailor watched the currents, the vortex. He saw that some objects didn’t fall, but were whirled up to the level of the sea. By studying the whirlpool, and by cooperating with it, the sailor makes good his escape. But he didn’t do alone; he did it with the help of a barrel. The sailor tied himself to the barrel, and then he threw himself into the Maelstrom. And around, and around they went, but in time the barrel and the sailor rose to the surface. He was saved.

The new age of digital technology offers pathways and platforms that enable us to connect with each other and our environment in ways we never dreamed of possible. The Commons will take the experience of community to new heights drawing us together and encouraging us to share our thoughts and experiences.

The strength of a community lies in a sense of belonging. We gather in public spaces to relax share music and art, exchange ideas and reinforce our communal ties. Those spaces define us as a community. A media commons bringing our community together through the power of public media.
