Suggested Timetable for the Foundation Course

Introduction to the Appendix

This appendix provides a suggested timetable for the six-week Foundation Course. The timetable is structured in such a way that each topic builds upon the knowledge learnt from previous units. This enables the students to expand their knowledge and skills on underwater archaeology in a progressive manner, within the limited duration of the training course. Changes to the sequence of the units may disrupt the logical flow of learning and be disadvantageous to the students.

Considering that the students may come from different academic backgrounds and have varying levels of experience, the first two weeks are devoted to the basics of maritime archaeology. The lectures and practical sessions are intended to prepare the students for the field diving exercises that take place during the third and fourth weeks of the training period. During the field diving exercises on an actual shipwreck, students are taught how to assess and survey the site and plan how the archaeological site can be sustainably managed and safeguarded. The final two weeks are focused on the preparation of a management plan for the shipwreck and how to present findings to both professionals and the general public.

Considering that the timetable may change according to the availability of the selected trainers, the organizers should inform the trainers as early as possible, so that they have adequate time to plan and ensure their availability during the dates of the units assigned to them.
